Outlook

Although the rebound in markets in the second half of March has been impressive, in the magnitude of the moves, investors are still facing many risks and uncertainties. First quarter earnings season is set to commence in April, where companies are expected to continue to guide analyst expectations lower, despite the extensive downgrades that we have seen recently. Elsewhere the outlook for economic activity remains poor and although some of the leading indicators have stabilised over the past month they continue to remain close to historical lows.

Markets

The first quarter of the year proved to be quite difficult for equity markets with further weakness in the first two months leading to new lows in the current bear market before a strong rally recouped some of the losses in March. Economic data continued to surprise on the downside early in the quarter and official comments referred to substantial risks to growth and the possibility of a prolonged slowdown which gave rise to fears of any recovery being pushed out to 2010.

There was major disappointment at the lack of details in the new US administration's financial sector support package released in February which led to a further sell off in markets.

Markets turned in March as a number of banks indicated the first quarter could be profitable on the back of strong investment banking related activity. Proposals to ease mark to market accounting rules which would reduce levels of required write downs by banks and suggestions of changes which would make shorting stocks more difficult also contributed to the gains. Proposals to facilitate the purchase of troubled assets and loans from banks in the US were announced which involved equity participation by the government and private interests. March also provided some relief on the economic front with signs of stabilisation in a number of economic releases which provided hope that a recovery could begin in late 2009 or early 2010. Despite the gains in March, most major markets still ended the quarter down. Europe fell 14.0%, US 11.7%, UK 10.2% and Japan 10.0%. The Pacific Basin was the one exception with the region up 1.6% over the three months. Ireland was down 6.4%.

Most sectors were down during the period although sector performance was quite mixed. Financials were the worst performer given the ongoing stresses of the financial crisis and dilution to shareholders following various capital injections by governments. Out-performers included technology stocks with some leading players highlighting signs of stabilisation in demand trends towards quarter end.

Summit Technology Fund

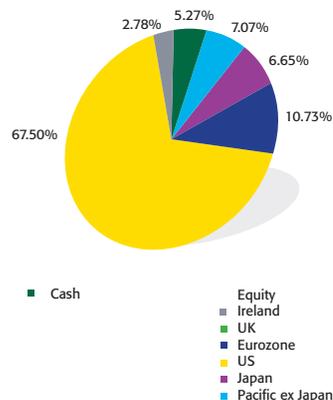

Review

Over the quarter the technology sector rose approx 9.1% in Euro terms.

The fund bought Fujifilm, the Japanese LCD materials and copier and printer company. After recent falls the stock was attractive on valuation grounds with forthcoming restructuring plans likely to lay the foundation for improved performance going forward. Non core, unprofitable businesses are likely to be exited. The outlook for the LCD materials operations appear to be improving. We added to Research in Motion, the maker of the Blackberry given improving prospects for sales and also added to Oracle as it offers stable top line growth, significant margin improvement potential, strong cash flow, cross sell opportunities and the introduction of a dividend indicates managements confidence in the outlook.

We reduced the positions in Corning and Intel and sold out of Hon Hai the electronic component manufacturer.
